Dear Parents.

When we conducted SCOPE 2020, the first School Conference of Parties for students to debate and discuss climate action last year, we had a segment where students from the participating schools wrote stories and contributed artwork. We have collated several of these winning entries in a series called The Climate Diaries, which has been published on Amazon. We are proud to feature two stories authored by our own students and art work contributed by several of our students. All student work has been acknowledged and so also the posters drawn by children from several of our GEMS schools. The book is currently priced at $0.99 USD and those who buy it will be able to lend the book as well.

Please find below the link for the book. There is immense joy in knowing that our first book is out there now for people to read and experience! We are extremely proud of all the GEMS students whose work has been featured here and we will be continuing this series in the coming years.

Congratulations to all our students and we hope this will inspire them to write and publish their own books.
